- 1. As set forth in detail below, Defendants have engaged in a scheme to market and distribute counterfeit HPE products, bearing Plaintiff HPDC's and HPED's marks ("Infringing Products"), through transactions on Defendants' respective online storefronts, and through other distribution channels, thereby directly harming Plaintiffs, Plaintiffs' brands, and Plaintiffs' established reputation for producing the highest quality networking communications and information technology products and services.
- Plaintiffs' customers have come to rely on Plaintiffs' sophisticated networking 2. products to run critical and highly secured networks supporting sensitive infrastructure throughout the world, including throughout the United States. Counterfeit products can cause privacy and security vulnerabilities, data loss, network downtime and substantial business interruption. Plaintiffs seek to hold Defendants accountable for the mass infringement and counterfeiting, and related unfair competition arising from Defendants' sales of the Infringing Products, and to protect Plaintiffs' supply chain and distribution infrastructure, and brand.

equipment from a garage in Palo Alto, California. Hewlett-Packard became an innovator in its field, developing technologies and inventing new products, growing to become one of the world's largest information technology companies. Hewlett-Packard specialized in developing and manufacturing personal computers and printers, as well as enterprise hardware products and services, including support services and enterprise software. In late 2015, Hewlett-Packard split into HP Inc. (specializing in the manufacture of personal computers, printers and printer cartridges) and HPE (specializing in the manufacture of enterprise IT hardware, as well as the creation and distribution of enterprise software and support services).

- 18. Much like Hewlett-Packard, HPE is a multinational enterprise company that delivers industry leading, high-quality information and technology products, consulting, and support services to its large and diverse customer base, including governments, large enterprises, and small to medium-sized businesses. Among other areas, HPE's business includes telecommunications networking hardware products and solutions, small to enterprise level data storage products and solutions, data center configuration and installation products and services, as well as various enterprise and information and technology management software solutions.
- 19. Hewlett-Packard (and now HP Inc.) invested substantial effort and resources to develop and promote public recognition of the "HP"-related marks. These trademarks are owned by HP Hewlett Packard Group LLC ("TM JV"), which has conveyed an exclusive license to use and enforce the HP and HP Logo trademarks to HPDC. In turn, HPDC granted a temporary transitional use license to Hewlett Packard Enterprise Development LP ("HPED"), an HPE subsidiary which holds title to intellectual property for HPE, so that HPE could use the HP and HP Logo trademarks during a phase-out period, until full implementation of the new HPE trademarks. During this phase-out period, the HP Marks on HPE products signify to the public that the products are high quality, genuine, HPE products. The use of the HP Marks by counterfeiters is intended to trade on the famous status and wide-spread recognition of the HP Marks on HPE products, and will likely continue after the phase-out period, to signal falsely that the products are high-quality, genuine, HPE products, when in reality, they are not.
