versus

CORELLIUM, INC.,

Defendant-Counter Claimant-Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida
D.C. Docket No. 9:19-cv-81160-RS

Before BRANCH and LUCK, Circuit Judges, and SANDS,* District Judge.

PER CURIAM:

This is a copyright case. Apple Inc. owns copyrights for iOS—the operating system that the company uses for devices like iPhones, iPads, and iPod Touches—and for some of that operating system’s icons and wallpapers. Corellium, Inc. is a technology company. It created a virtualization software—basically a virtual phone—that can run various operating systems (like Android and iOS). The virtualization software includes tools that enable security researchers to gain deeper insights into these operating systems. Looking to stop Corellium from selling its product, Apple sued Corellium alleging copyright infringement.

The district court granted summary judgment for Corellium on Apple’s three copyright claims: (1) direct infringement of iOS (count one), (2) direct infringement of Apple’s icons and wallpapers (count two), and (3) contributory infringement (count three). As to count one, the district court found that Corellium was not liable for copying iOS because Corellium was shielded by the fair use doctrine. As to counts two and three, the district court entered summary judgment for Corellium without separately addressing those claims.

* Honorable W. Louis Sands, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Georgia, sitting by designation.
