Galderma wants to own the Rosacea Market

March 8th, 2010, by David Pascoe | galderma, in the news

Galderma is a large multinational pharmaceutical company. They don't have much in the way of internet blogs and online chatter so it is hard to get a feel for what makes them tick. In recent years Galderma has become the heavyweight of dermatology, especially in rosacea treatments.

The program list from the recent AAD meeting in Florida gives an idea of where Galderma are concentrating their promotional efforts.

Let us start with the list of advertisers ;

ADVERTISING INDEX
Abbott Laboratories	30-31
Amgen	484-50
Bausch Lomb	295
Canfield Imaging Systems	297

You can see that Galderma is far and away the most prominent advertiser.

Many won't have seen these advertisements, so here we are, a snapshot of the sorts of marketing material that Galderma is using to target practitioners. In the handouts each prescription product is normally accompanied by a second page comprising the mandatory prescribing information.

Oracea

Amneal 1074
Amneal v. Supernus
IPR2013-00368

Tagline: Essential for a balanced diet for healthy skin. and Every Body Benefits.

Galderma here are promoting what it sees as a non-irritating cleanser, fragrance-free moisturizer, being non-greasy and non-comedogenic and being ideal for face, hands and body.

Sponsorships

Galderma is one of the major sponsors of the National Rosacea Society. You can see from the NRS web site, Galderma's donations enable the NRS to conduct their educational program.

Other Products

Of course Galderma is also developing a product dubbed sansrosa, it calls CD07805/47. If and when this product comes to market, Galderma's rosacea portfolio will be even more impressive.

So What ?

OK so this is all interesting, but what would you like to see from Galderma ? How would you like to see the deepest pockets in the industry spend their research, development and promotional dollars ?

I use both Oracea and Metro Cream and I think they are both great products, and there is obviously a huge need for SansRosa since there are not many options for permanent burning redness and flushing. However, I think most people who suffer from rosacea would rather see them putting money into a cure instead of excessive advertising. I'd personally like to see them get behind the research and products that GlycoMira or Dr. Gallo's lab in San Diego are developing.

It is odd that you wrote this article on Galderma because Galderma Canada contacted me in February and asked if "the RRDi [would] be interested in educational partnerships with Galderma." We sent a letter to Galderma years ago and was totally ignored. I replied the RRDi is interested but haven't heard anything as of this date. From your excellent articles on Oracea I discovered that the New York Times reports that sales of Oracea for the first half of 2006 totaled $9.1 million and that if you are 'reading the graph right', Oracea prescriptions numbered 1.2 million a month in December 2007. Oracea sales was worth approximately $104 million for the twelve-month period ending July 2009. This figure is up almost 200% from the previously reported sales of $52.5 million in 2007. You can imagine how much Oracea sales were for 2009 and will no doubt be reported soon. As far as I know there hasn't been any studies showing the long term effects of Oracea longer than nine months which is something that needs to be done. Also there aren't any studies comparing Oracea to low dose doxycycline or low dose Doryx which is another study worth pursuing. There are plenty of studies comparing metronidazole. If the RRDi receives any 'educational' grants from Galderma we will be able to use the majority of the funds for actual rosacea research that we choose and we listen to rosacea sufferers. If Gallo research is what is called for then so be it. There may be some novel research that needs to be pursued besides Gallo. Anyway, I certainly enjoyed your article you wrote here about Galderma. Your editorial on this subject is quite interesting.
