10 QUESTIONS FOR BILL RICHARDSON

s a former U.N. ambassador, Bill Richardson, 58, has a knack for persevering in sticky situations. The New Mexico Governor, who titled his new autobiography Between Worlds The Making of an American Life, spoke with TIME's Karen Tumulty about his possible bid to become the first Latino President, the shocking grooming habits of some world leaders and his storied baseball career.

YOU'VE BEEN SPOTTED IN PRESIDENTIAL RUN-UP PLACES LIKE NEW HAMPSHIRE, WHAT'S IT GOING TO TAKE FOR A DEMOCRAT TO WIN THE WHITE HOUSE AGAIN? First, we have to have a candidate who appeals to the South and the West and pockets in the Midwest. Otherwise, we will be relegated to being the Northeastern West Coast bicoastal party, and for sure we will lose. We need a candidate with strong national-security credentials, and we need somebody who will speak positively about issues and not just attack the Bush Administration.

YOU SOUND LIKE YOU MIGHT BE DESCRIBING BILL RICHARDSON. No, no, I think there's a lot of good candidates out there. I do believe that, based on the party's history, Governors should have a better shot. I think the American people see Governors as budget balancers, as setting agendas, as managing.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE PRO-POSAL TO INSERT A COUPLE OF CAUCUSES BETWEEN IOWA AND NEW HAMPSHIRE, PLACES WHERE YOU'VE BEEN MAKING FRIENDS RECENTLY? Nobody should tamper with Iowa and New Hampshire being the initial primaries or caucuses. That's God given and party given. But I see no harm in bringing other states with diverse populations early into the process. I don't believe quick-and-dirty early results are in the best interest of the Democratic Party.

GIVEN THAT YOU DECLARED A STATE OF EMERGENCY IN NEW MEXICO OVER ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION, WHAT DO YOU THINK OF BUSH'S RENEWING HIS CALL FOR A TEMPORARY GUEST-WORKER PROGRAM? It's not realistic to deport 12 million undocumented workers. You have to bring them out of the shadows and then have a series of benchmarks and penalties for those who don't engage in proper behavior.

SO DO YOU FEEL AS IF YOU TWO ARE PRETTY MUCH ON THE SAME PAGE? I think the President has made a good start. What he is unwilling to do, which I regret, is put political capital on the line to get an immigration bill passed. He seems to be catering too much to his ultraconservative wing that just wants heightened border security. You need to deal with both the push and pull of immigration.

YOU HAVE NEGOTIATED WITH SOME OF THE WORLD'S TOUGHEST LEADERS. WHAT'S THE SECRET TO GETTING WHAT YOU WANT OUT OF THEM? You've got to engage them personally. I try to get to know as much as I can about each of the people I'm negotiating with before we start.

WHAT TIDBIT TURNED OUT TO BE THE MOST USEFUL? When I was negotiating with [former Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister] Tariq Aziz and Saddam Hussein for the release of two Americans, I found out that Aziz was a Chaldean Catholic. As a Catholic myself, the fact that I proposed that he and I attend a church service together was an advantage in connecting with him that allowed us to make the negotiations for the release of the Americans easier.

started cutting his toenails. I his socks and with his knife started cutting his toenails, I didn't know whether to laugh, cry or stop my conversation. But I persisted.

LAST MONTH YOU ANNOUNCED THAT, AFTER RESEARCHING THE MATTER, YOU DETERMINED THAT THE KANSAS CITY ATHLETICS HAD NEVER DRAFTED YOU. HOW COULD YOU MISREMEMBER THAT DETAIL FOR FOUR DECADES? I had been told by various scouts that I would be drafted if I signed. When it appeared in the official program of my team that I had been drafted, I assumed it was correct. However, the mistake was mine. I should have checked. Obviously, it's become a little bit of an instance where I dropped the ball. Get it, Karen?

I GET IT. I GET IT. Get that? Dropped the ball?

The Most Amazing Inventions of 2005

Our annual roundup of the best new products and technological innovations prompted readers to share their excitement about the cool things that await them in the future—maybe even under the Christmas tree. Some were troubled by the ethical implications of the cloned dog Snuppy

I TRULY ENJOYED YOUR SELECTION OF the best new inventions [Nov. 21]. I liked the ENV hydrogen-powered motorcycle and the Shift tricycle, whose rear wheels move closer together at higher speeds and separate for balance at slower ones. But I was most impressed by the Life-Straw [a drinking tube with powerful filters that can prevent waterborne infections that kill millions of people in the developing world]. I've traveled to areas where clean water is not a given, so I can appreciate the LifeStraw's value. Thank you for opening eyes around the world to this wonderful device.

RATHIKA RAMADOSS Gallup, N.M.

CONGRATULATIONS ON "THE MOST AMAZing Inventions of 2005." Your package on new ideas, gadgets and gifts has become another eagerly anticipated feature, like your annual Person of the Year. Thanks for keeping TIME a leader.

JIM TRACY Denver, Colo.

SNUPPY, THE DOG CLONED BY SOUTH KOrean scientists, was a disturbing choice for TIME's Invention of the Year. The cloning of mammals has an extremely low success rate, and experience suggests that Snuppy may later suffer debilitating illness. The purpose of the Snuppy experiment is clearly to put a cuter, more approachable face on the use of cloning technologies in humans. While there are people who might approve of the use of more than 100 canine egg donors and 123 surrogate mother dogs to get one viable clone, I and many others consider this "invention" a cynical public relations stunt.

> JAYDEE HANSON INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT Washington

44Fantastic! I haven't seen so many things I didn't know I couldn't live without since I was an 8-year-old. Please, Santa, please.77

THOMPSON LANGE Carmel, Calif.

I WAS A BIT UNNERVED BY YOUR REFERring to Snuppy as an invention. The cloning technique is remarkable, without a doubt, but I believe it is wrong to classify a cloned creature as an invention. Doing so somehow implies that a clone is different and inferior to other living creatures merely because the method of creation has changed. A clone is just another member of its species.

Laura White Folsom, Calif.

YOUR LIST OF INVENTIONS LEFT ME yawning. There weren't any great breakthroughs to dazzle the imagination. Many of the items were trivial. It's not TIME's fault that the year didn't see the introduction of something fantastic. From the standpoint of new technology, it was a very dull year.

Lou Varricchio Middlebury, Vt.

Mourning the Dead

"HONOR AFTER THE FALL," YOUR PHOTO essay on Marine Major Steve Beck and his mission of notifying families of the loss of a loved one in Iraq [Nov. 21], was one of the most powerful and poignant stories I've ever read in TIME. I wiped away tears trying to imagine the pain and loss felt by the families of the fallen. I was also struck by the professional and compassionate way in which Beck notified and supported those families. I respect and admire him for performing that incredibly difficult but sadly necessary assignment.

WALTER (SKIP) WILSON Irving, Texas

I'M 41 YEARS OLD AND HAVE BECOME A little jaded over the years, but I was moved to tears by the images of Beck taking care of families who have lost a loved one. I think he and the other service members performing that noble and depressing task deserve America's thanks. Not all heroes are overseas.

ilation and success [Nov. 21]. I was startled by his assertion that France needs "the kind of self-reformation that America [had] in the 1960s, when it finally began welcoming African Americans into mainstream society." Is he forgetting the 1960s riots, led by unemployed and disenfranchised blacks, that engulfed the U.S.? I don't call that selfreformation. When black people took to American streets, they finally got a little respect. I suspect that the unemployed Arab and black youths in France want nothing less.

Holly, Mich.

KRAUTHAMMER SAYS APPEASEMENT OF the Arab world has not helped the French resolve the issues of its Arab citizens. How are the French appeasing the Arab world by enforcing a law that strictly bars young girls from wearing Muslim head scarves in public schools? That is not appeasement; that is self-interest.

LEADING BY EXAMPLE

In addition to expressing admiration for the 18 Global Health heroes TIME profiled in its special report [Nov. 7]. readers were impressed by the leadership of celebrities in the campaign to improve health care worldwide. Dotti Nie from Flint, Mich., singled out Bill Gates: "Here is a man brought up with middle-class values, and he chooses to spend his wealth not nurturing selfish dreams and desires but working to ensure that even the poorest people will have their basic medical needs met." Wrote a Seoul reader: "Bono and Bill and Melinda Gates are remarkable people with a clear vision of how to make a quantum difference. THIS IS NOT ABOUT GIVING MONEY BUT ABOUT HAVING AN INSPIRATIONAL EFFECT ON OTHERS." And a Kathmandu journalist praised the interview with Bill and Melinda Gates as "one of the best I've ever read. It gave so much insight into the lives of the couple. They send a message to everyone: each person's contribution, big or small, makes a difference. Every individual can help save a life-one life."

Like all other multicultural nations, France will have to effectively integrate minorities into society. The problem is an internal socioeconomic one, and it has nothing to do with Islam or the broader problems of the Middle East.

> MURAD ELSAIDI Little Rock, Ark.

YOUNG FRENCH PROTESTERS WANT TO get a job, be integrated into society and be treated like everyone else. They protest and burn cars, as French people in the past fought against inequality and stormed the Bastille. France's young Arabs are fighting for equality—a French ideal. I hope they succeed.

> MAGUELONE IVAL Corvallis, Ore.

AS A FRENCH PERSON LIVING IN THE U.S., I want to point out that those who believe that all the rioters in France are Muslim are mistaken. The protesters are a mixed population of immigrants. Many are Muslim, some belong to religions other than Islam and some are not religious. What is happening in France has nothing to do with Muslim extremism or al-Qaeda. The riots are the result of France's failure to absorb and integrate its immigrant population. Period.

Torture of a Prisoner

YOUR PIECE ON IRAOI PRISONER MANADEL al-Jamadi, nicknamed the Iceman, who died at Abu Ghraib while in U.S. custody, should alert all conscientious Americans that a gestapo-style secret police is operating in our society [Nov. 21]. The CIA orders unannounced midnight abductions of suspected insurgents and tortures prisoners, sometimes to death. Your article should make all of us scream at our elected officials that Americans never condone torture in any form, by anybody. Our government should do what its citizens want. I am afraid of what we would find if we opened up the can of worms that is the CIA.

> RICHARD SNIDER Cumberland, Md.

DIDN'T OUR PRESIDENT VOW TO FREE THE Iraqi people from the kind of terrorism practiced under Saddam Hussein? Yet our own government condones terrorist tactics, torture and murder when they suit its purpose. I pray we never again allow a President to hold office who con-

Who Shall Live?

IN THE ARTICLE ABOUT A NEW METHOD OF screening fetuses for Down syndrome in the first trimester [Nov. 21], TIME asked, "Is a life with the syndrome worth living?" We pride ourselves on our tolerance. Yet encouragement to terminate less-than-perfect pregnancies will surely lead to more discrimination against the living handicapped. Can we praise ourselves as a nondiscriminatory society when we question whether people who are not the most highly functioning are worth saving—let alone worth tolerating or protecting?

MIKHAIL GORBACHEV

Former President of the Soviet Union, 1987 Man of the Year, 1989 Man of the Decade I note that Ted Turner has nominated Bono. I would like to endorse that.

1987, '89 We have met on several occasions, and I have been impressed by his actions. He has been a voice for the poor, for the environment, for peace—and for the emerging global civil society.

YNTHIA COOPER

TAX REFORM: A BALK?

RESIDENT BUSH
may have drawn
cheers at campaign
rallies last year by calling the federal income tax code "a complicated mess"
and promising to make its "million pages" simpler and fairer. But H&R Block can breathe easy for another season.
Bush aides tell TIME that the President is likely to postpone

White House official said. But House Republicans are still likely to pass a simplification measure by April 15 so they can bash the IRS on the campaign trail.

Surprisingly enough, the biggest crowd pleaser is turning out to be the President himself, despite low ratings in the polls. White House officials say Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney have already done more to help '06 candidates than they had at any big push for comprehensive tax reform-which looked like it would be a centerpiece of next year's agenda-until '07 or '08. In the meantime, he will probably start small by mentioning the issue in the State of the Union and other addresses next year. Tax reform tested poorly with a Republican-financed focus group, showing more groundwork needs to be laid. The official White House stance is that Bush has not decided whether to pursue the idea next year, but aides say they doubt they could attract Democratic support in a midterm-election year. And the G.O.P. is gun-shy after the Social Security debacle. "No one wants to put something out there that's not going to go anywhere," a the same point in the '02 and '04 election cycles. So far this year, Bush has raised $31 million at 13 events, including last week's $125-a-plate pizza-and-burgers reception at the Baltimore Ravens' stadium for the Senate campaign of Maryland Lieutenant Governor Michael Steele. Mark Knoller of CBS News, who meticulously logs presidential movements, says that since taking office, Bush has spoken at 184 events that raised more than $505 million. But given that a new request to campaign with him arrives daily-and that Bill Clinton managed to cram in 203 fund raisers in his last 13 months in office-the current fund raiser in chief will no doubt keep hauling in the lucre. -By Mike Allen

Talking Up Iraq at Home . . .

STUNG BY AN ornery public and exasperated Republican lawmakers, the White House is preparing a blitz of TV-friendly events to show that George W. Bush knows what he's doing in Iraq, and to define achievable terms for victory. The drive started last week at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., where he gave the first of four big speeches leading up to Iraq's Dec. 15 elections. Bush choked up as he read a letter found on the laptop of fallen Marine Corporal Jeff Starr: "If you are reading this, then I've died in Iraq ... I don't regret going." Despite the resolute rhetoric—and a backdrop declaring PLAN FOR VICTORY—the address signaled an incremental withdrawal of troops before the 2006 U.S. midterm elections. Likewise, the release last week of a 35-page report, National

Bush aims to communicate Iraqi progress as the military forges on Strategy for Victory in Iraq, aimed to portray Bush as acting deliberately rather than buckling to critics, who carped that the plan had arrived a few years late.

At a congressional retreat in Maryland the next day, G.O.P. leaders-eager to share blame for the party's woes-lit into White House aides, charging that members of Congress have to trek to Iraq to hear about progress there and that the Administration has been AWOL in touting the economy. Bush aides admitted they have been behind the eight ball, partly because of Hurricane Katrina, and detailed a blueprint for better communications. Bush dashed into the Rose Garden late last week to declare that the economy "continues to gain strength and momentum." The event had been thrown together so quickly that the usual velvet ropes were not set up to pen back journalists. "We're trying the trusting method," an aide joked. A SURPRISE IN EGYPT

he Bush Administration's Arab democracy campaign is helping bring change to Egypt, if not quite the sort Washington is after. The fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood, which strongly opposes U.S. intervention in Iraq and support for Israel, won 76 seats in the first two rounds of parliamentary elections and could gain a total of 100 once the final vote is completed this week. Says Abdel Monem Said of Cairo's Al-Ahram Centerfor Political and Strategic Studies: "Everyone is surprised, perhaps even the Brotherhood."

Thugs try to keep pro-Muslim Brotherhood voters from polls

President Hosni Mubarak's ruling National Democratic Party is still expected to wind up with nearly 80% of the Parliament's 454 seats. But the unprecedented freedom it granted opponents in this election enabled the 77-year-old Brotherhoodwhose members run as independents because of a ban on religious parties—to field twice as many candidates as in the last vote five years ago, when 15 members took office. The group did well this year despite voter intimidation, including some poll closings, witnessed by TIME. A U.S. State Department spokesman still praised the vote as "an important step in the democratic reform process." The many calls for change from the U.S. and Europe, acknowledges Brotherhood activist Essam Erian, "made a difference." -By Lindsay Wise and Amany Radwan

... While Tripping Up on Propaganda Abroad

OP AIDES AT THE PENTAGON and State Department are furious that the President's big speech last week touting progress in Iraq was largely drowned out by disclosures that the U.S. command in Baghdad had been secretly planting rosy stories in Iraqi newspapers. Administration sources say Karen Hughes, who is in charge of improving the U.S.'s image abroad, is fuming and that neither she-as the State Department's Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy-nor such senior Pentagon officers as Joint Chiefs Chairman Peter Pace knew of the program until the Los Angeles Times broke the story last week.

Under a $5 million contract negotiated last year by the U.S. command's Information Operations Task Force, the Lincoln Group, a Washington-based p.r. firm, translated upbeat stories written by military information officers and then paid Iraqi newspapers to print them or hired Iraqi journalists to sell them as their own stories. U.S. officers in Baghdad insisted last week they were only trying to get the truth out by buying editorial space, a customary practice in Iraq that prompted Hughes to launch programs there to train journalists to be more independent. Says a Defense Department official: "This certainly undercuts what she's trying to do." —By Douglas Waller and Elaine Shannon overnor mitt romney is a massachusetts politician with a long, narrow face, an impossible shock of hair and presidential ambitions. He's also pretty tall. But any resemblance to another recent Massachusetts politician who ran for President evaporates the moment Romney opens his mouth: his demeanor and metabolism are the opposite of John Kerry's informal, conversational, enthusiastic and speedy. Or maybe it was just that we were talking about his rather remarkable plan to bring mandatory universal healthcare coverage to Massachusetts by next summer, the first time a Republican has tried to pull off this most Democratic of policy goals.

The Republican Who Thinks Big on Health Care

"I don't like calling it universal coverage," he told me last week. "That smacks of Hillarycare. But I do think we've come up with a way to get everybody covered through the free-market system." Romney's way is not new: policy wonks call it an "individual mandate" system, but the Governor doesn't like that term either. "I call it a personal responsibility system," he said.

Here is how it would work. Massachusetts now spends about $1 billion a year to provide emergency health care for at least 500,000 uninsured citizens. About 200,000 of those are young people, predominantly male, who are making enough money to buy health insurance but figure they don't need it. They would be required to buy a relatively inexpensive health insurance policy, with higher deductibles and co-pays-that's where the "mandate" comes in. Another 100,000 are extremely poor people who are eligible for Medicaid; a concerted effort would be made to bring them into the system. The remaining 200,000 are the people who have been most neglected by the system in the past: the working poor, people who have low-end service jobs or work part time for employers who don't offer health coverage. Romney's gamble is that Massachusetts can take the $1 billion it spends on the uninsured and use it to subsidize coverage for the working poor. The Bush Administration will kick in another $1 billion. over three years, to make the experiment work if Romney can get a suitable proposal through his state legislature. "Our plan would

Romney wants universal health care in his state but won't call it that cost the poorest eligible families only about $2 per week in premiums," Romney said. "The more you earn, the more you pay."

Sounds simple enough. So why hasn't it been tried before? Because interest groups on the left and right hate the idea. Conservatives don't like the mandatory part: if a 28-year-old software designer doesn't want to buy health insurance, why should the government force him to do so? Simple answer: fairness. The rest of us pay for it now when he drives his motorcycle into a tree and runs up a huge medical bill. Health insurance should be no different from auto insurance, a basic civic responsibility. There's also a larger argument for the common good: the more healthy young people are paying into the system, the lower the premiums for everyone else. But Democrats, skittish since the Clinton proposal was trashed in 1994, have refused to call for an individual mandate. In the past two presidential campaigns, Bill Bradley, John Kerry and Howard Dean proposed comprehensive health plans, but fearing the political consequences, none of them required softwaredesigning motorcycle riders to kick in.

On the left, activists dislike an individualmandate system because it relies on the ability of poor people to navigate the complexities and uncertainties of the free market. Some favor a government-funded system like those used in Canada and Europe. Others, realizing that socialized medicine just won't fly in the U.S., support an "employer mandate" similar > to the program that Clinton proposed in 1993. "Why shouldn't low-end service companies that provide little or no health insurance for their workers now. be forced to kick in?" asks John McDonough, of the advocacy group Health Care for All. "They're not going to move to China." Fair point, except for one minor detail: if new costs are forced upon private companies, they'll just pass them along to consumers ... and maybe tack on a couple of extra pennies of profit in the process, blaming the higher prices on liberal politicians who want socialized medicine. Other critics of Romney's plan fear it will ultimately cost more than advertised and the working poor won't receive sufficient care.

"They may be right," the Governor told me. "Or it may cost less, if people start getting the proper preventive care. We'll have to see how it works, and make adjustments over time."

Indeed, Romney's plan seems a plausible compromise between the Massachusetts senate, which passed a bill that isn't mandatory and therefore doesn't cover all the uninsured, and the house, which passed one that requires both an individual mandate and a tax on employers that don't provide health insurance. "The Bush Administration isn't going to give us $1 billion for a 'demonstration' project that doesn't demonstrate how to cover everyone," the Governor said, "and it certainly won't favor one that taxes employers." A deal must be cut soon, or the federal money will be lost. "I'm optimistic," Romney said. "Ted Kennedy told me last week he wants to be there for the bill signing."
